

Parent Support Options During Remote Instruction

Parents who are struggling to provide adequate support to their children during remote instruction should consider the following:

1. Reaching out to one or more of the following youth-support organizations who are currently offering summer programming and who will likely offer support during the school year. They are likely to be most helpful with children and families who have already been involved in their programming but many will also have support for new families:
 - a. - COA Youth and Family Services
 - b. - Neighborhood House of Milwaukee
 - c. - YMCA
 - d. - Boys and Girls Club
 - e. - PEAK Initiative
 - f. - Urban Ecology Center
 - g. - Ephesians Missionary Baptist Church
2. Inform your child's teacher and dean that there is an obstacle to successful remote learning. The school will make every effort to work with parents to develop solutions. Once the school has received a waiver from the Milwaukee Health Department for on-site instruction, the school will offer learning space for small groups of students who cannot be successful at home.
3. Consider networking with other parents with children in the same grade level to create "pods" of learning. This is when a group of parents works together to share the load of supporting instruction with each parent taking one day per week to monitor instruction while the other parents work.
