

Jeb Hensarling

Executive Vice Chairman Americas, UBS

Jeb Hensarling currently serves as Executive Vice Chairman of UBS Americas, the global bank.

Before joining UBS, Hensarling completed an eight-term career in the U.S. Congress. He served three terms as Chairman of the House Financial Services Committee, which exercises jurisdiction over a broad swath of the nation's economy including banking, securities, insurance, housing and monetary policy. During his tenure, the Wall Street Journal referred to Hensarling as "[the driver] of economic policy in the House." He also served three terms on the House Budget Committee.

During his Congressional career, Hensarling further served as House Republican Conference Chairman in the 112th Congress, the 4th highest ranking position in the Republican Leadership, where he was responsible for helping coordinate strategy, policy, messaging and communications for House Republicans. In the 110th Congress, he led the Republican Study Committee, Congress' largest caucus and the one dedicated to advancing free market principles. Additionally, Hensarling was chosen to serve on the Congressional Oversight Panel for the TARP program during the 2008 financial crisis. Finally, Congressman Hensarling served on both the Simpson-Bowells Committee and the Joint Select Committee on Deficit Reduction.

Prior to serving in Congress, Hensarling had a varied career in business. He served as an officer of Maverick Capital, a well-known hedge fund, and as Vice President of Communications for Green Mountain Energy, one of the nation's leading retailers of renewable energy. Additionally, Hensarling spent several years practicing both corporate and real estate law with a major San Antonio law firm.

Born in Stephenville, Texas, Hensarling grew up working on his father's farm and became an Eagle Scout at the age of 14. He earned a bachelor's degree in economics from Texas A&M University and a law degree from the University of Texas. He currently resides in Dallas with his wife and two children.

In addition to his work for UBS, Hensarling serves as a Senior Fellow at the Milken Institute, affiliated with its Center for Financial Markets.
