Devocalizing Sea Lions

B. Eiseman, M.D.; R. Dilbone, D.V.M.; J. Slater, A.B.

THE HOARSE bark of a sea lion is a familiar nuisance to zoo keepers and to others who keep these exotic diving mammals. At first the bark is only an infrequent noise but becomes louder and more persistent as the male matures. In this report, a surgical technique for eliminating the sea lion's bark is described.

Operative Cases

A 1½-year-old male sea lion (Pinnipedia Otaria jubata or Zalophus californianus) weighing 200 lb. and a 2-year-old female weighing 160 lb. were anesthetized and operated on in an attempt to achieve devocalization. The sea lions, along with other diving mammals, were confined in a large salt water pool in Naples, Fla.

Catching an untrained sea lion in a large open pool is difficult and requires a heavy
