The only customer service audit checklist you'll ever need: 30+ SKILLS & TOOLS ANY

BUSINESS SHOULD OPTIMIZE.

www - ruby - com

When did customer service

Maybe when the world got complicated. We live in a dizzyingly elaborate, interconnected global society teeming with people, technology, organizations, and become so complicated?

their various competing interests. An action as simple as finding a plumber to fix a leaky sink can bring someone into contact with multiple channels, opinions, advertisers, and behind-the-scenes systems. From Google to Yelp to Aunt Irene, everyone and everything has an influence over a customer's thoughts and behavior. As a result, customer service is more challenging—and more important—than ever. It's the key differentiating factor between businesses that succeed and grow and businesses that drown in the noise. Customers expect better, more personalized service within minutes of reaching out to a business. That means you need to remain available and ready to be friendly, professional, and responsive at all times. This is particularly true for small businesses, whose best shot at outperforming the big guys is through customer service. It doesn't have to be complicated. You don't need to compromise on quality or drive yourself crazy answering phone calls and emails at all hours of the day and night. Any business, regardless of size or industry, can provide excellent customer service right

At Ruby, we know this from experience. Over 10,000 the phone. Having started as a four-person studio in companies have trusted our team to deliver topquality, meaningful customer service online and over combination of the two; virtually or in-person.

now—whether in-house, through outsourcing, or with a

What should you invest in? What are the most important customer service skills?

With all this in mind, many business owners get lost in equation:

calculating the customer service

What do your customers actually care about?

To help you succeed and grow in today's business environment, we've distilled everything we've most important best practices into the only customer service checklist learned and consolidated the you'll ever need.

2003, we've gone through the gauntlet ourselves. And we've learned a ton from our customers and the businesses we admire along the way. Today, Ruby is a recognized leader in customer service—but we haven't lost touch with our small business roots. Although we've grown significantly since the early days, our humble beginnings continue to shape every aspect of how we run our business and deliver our services.

looking to reach out. Some form of customer service also needs to be available 24 hours a day, 7 days a off. For many businesses, this isn't feasible or costeffective to manage in-house, which is where on-

Your receptionist(s) and other customer service staff who welcome visitors, answer phones, and respond online need to know how to greet customers properly, deal with challenging situations, route inquiries to the right person at your organization, and more.

5. Your phone number

Your customers shouldn't be spending time digging through business listings to find your phone number or trying to determine which of multiple numbers is the correct one. Make sure your business's phone number is available in a prominent location on your website, social media profiles, and any marketing and sales materials. Ideally, it should come up in the title or meta description when someone performs a web search for

6. Customer service is available

Don't think you need to offer chat on your website?

• 42% of all customers prefer chat over other

73% of consumers are satisfied with their experiences on live chat—the highest level of all benefit your business—and how to do it is easy to find.

your company.

through live chat.

communication channels.

customer service channels.

Consider the facts:

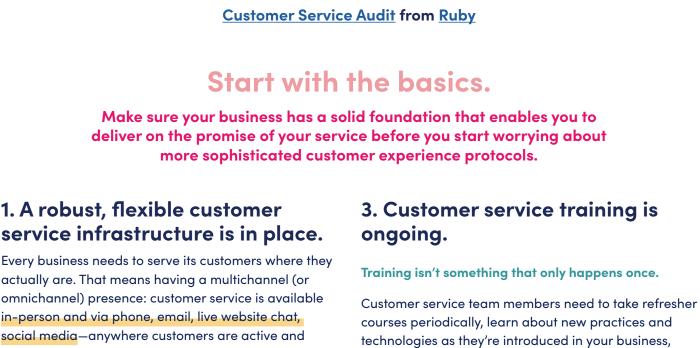

demand virtual receptionist services come in.

Use this resource when monitoring your customer service to audit your approach and optimize your customers' experiences. We've also included a wealth of information about the most important customer service skills, from the basics to the advanced.

Your customer service audit checklist.

Customer service audit checklist. BEGINNING WITH INTENTION week, 365 days per year. Keep in mind that not every their customer service skills. customer makes contact within the confines of business hours, and product and service issues don't take days 4. Customer service is available whenever possible, when someone calls that number, a 2. All customer service team human being should answer. Customers don't want to reach voicemail or deal with an Interactive Voice members are fully trained.

by phone.

Response (IVR) system. The phone is more important than ever, and every missed call is a missed shouldn't be making things up as they go along. People opportunity.

You need to have a business phone number. And and engage in continuous education and continual improvement. Learn six tips anyone can use to sharpen

7. Customer service is available through email. Not every customer service question can be answered through chat, and not every visitor to your website wants to communicate with someone live. You also need to be ready to accept and respond to emails to your business. You should be checking the inbox regularly (at least once a day, if not more often) and replying to most emails within 24 hours. As with your phone number, your business's email address should be displayed prominently. 8. Customer service is available via social media. An increasing number of customers are turning to social media sites such as Twitter, Facebook, and Instagram to connect with brands. If your business is

Chat prospects are 4.6 times more likely than other prospects to convert into customers. Read more about how live chat can Stay true to your word. Once you've laid the groundwork, maintain consistency and continue to meet client expectations.

9. You've created a comfortable, welcoming environment—

physically, virtually, or both.

One of the most important—and most frequently overlooked-elements of customer experience is the customer's first interaction in the business's space.

We're talking about physical spaces, such as lobbies, other digital spaces. In terms of the former, you need to offices, and waiting rooms, as well as websites and customer service plan.

comments, and direct messages, those customers will turn to your competitors. No matter your company's size, location, or industry, you need a social media unavailable to respond to their posts, tweets,

In terms of your website, it should be fast, easy to navigate, and optimized for any device. It should also contain any information you want customers to know about your company before they get in touch with you, and help customers take the next step—whether it's making a purchase or signing up for a mailing list. Here are some basic considerations for creating a good business website.

Learn how to charm new clients from the moment they walk in through your front consider fundamental questions like the following: How do guests feel when they enter your business? What's the first thing they see? Is there a comfortable place to sit?

chat goes unanswered." 11. Customer service wait times are minimal. Whenever and however they contact your business, your customers don't want to wait. The majority of consumers (approximately 80%) expect service within an hour of reaching out, and most of those people (75%) expect it within just five minutes. The more time they have to wait—the more rings they have to sit

12. Calls are screened and Excellent customer service starts before anyone says "hello." Smart businesses have systems in place to automatically route callers to the right people—e.g. to connect customers in specific areas to the appropriate period don't reach a busy line. When technology isn't available, human customer service professionals should be trained to seamlessly transfer calls by asking regional offices or to ensure callers during a busy transferred efficiently.

the right questions and acting quickly.

more than one language.

With the United States on track to become the largest Spanish-speaking country in the world, this one grows more important with each passing day. Businesses can no longer afford to be completely monolingual. You should be delivering the same quality of service to everyone you do business with, regardless of which language they speak. Learn how to overcome the

15. Team members practice active Customer service is about the customer. Your business needs to show you care about the people you serve by means listening attentively and never assuming what a truly being present in customer conversations. That customer wants or needs. You can practice active listening by taking notes, offering small verbal cues language barrier.

listening.

through—the higher the chances they'll look elsewhere.

Foster happiness.

13. Team members are greeting

10. You have support for off-hours and after-hours service.

As we laid out in tip #1, customer service can't really go dark or take days off. You need to have a solution in place for people who contact you when you're closed or too busy to respond immediately. Outsourcing is your friend here. Ruby's virtual receptionist services ensure no call or manner.

please?"

and quick.

There are right ways and wrong ways to greet customers. Here's how we do it at Ruby: Start with a greeting. It could be "Hello," or "Thank you for calling," or "Good morning/ afternoon," or a combination of all three. • Say the company's name. A plain "Hello" can be confusing to callers; they want to know that they've called the right place. • Offer assistance. You can say "How may I help you?" or "How may I assist you?" or—when you're routing calls rather than addressing questions directly—"How may I direct your call?" If there's a question you need to ask every customer ("What's your account number?"), this friendly way ("May I have your account number, is the time to ask it—again, in a professional

For a comprehensive guide on what to callers, download our free ebook. words to use when greeting and talking conversations positive, personal,

Again, customer service needs to be customer-centric.

Your customers aren't looking to waste time engaging in idle chatter, but they also don't want to be treated in responding as quickly as possible, greeting customers graciously, personalizing every interaction (e.g. using a caller's name), minding their manners, and remaining calm. It's equally important to eliminate unnecessary obstacles, avoid dead ends, and not obsess over mistakes. Learn conversational dos and don'ts.

a gruff or impersonal manner. Customer service professionals can achieve the right balance by people in a professional, friendly

14. You offer customer service in 17. Team members keep ("yep," "that's right," "mm-hmm"), reiterating what you've heard, and responding in ways that indicate you've been paying close attention. It's an art, but it's one that's easy to learn and master. 16. Team members demonstrate knowledge of your products and/ or services.

Your customer service workers should know what they're talking about. They may not be able to provide depth as your salespeople could, but they should be information about your products or services in as much able to answer basic questions and demonstrate some concerns, jargon, technology, news, and trends specific level of expertise in your industry or niche-the issues,

20. Team members personalize

If you want to build trust with your customers (and trust us, you do), you need to focus on forging and nurturing relationships. If your customers see your company as a service they require, they become loyal supporters and customer service interactions.

cherished resource or friend, rather than simply a enthusiastic advocates. Here are a few of our tried-

Remember—and use!—every customer's name.

Send customers forms of communication, such

 Keep track of milestones in regular customers' lives and businesses (new offices, marriages, as birthday notes, that aren't (explicitly)

"sales-y."

and-true strategies for personalizing service:

to your line of business.

babies, etc). Ensure you're providing every customer with service that matches their particular need.

22. Team members are empowered to solve customers' problems and go the extra mile. If you give your frontline customer service team members the tools and freedom they need, they'll provide extraordinary service. Ruby's entire staff has access to a prepaid Amazon account, and when a team member feels moved to send something special to a customer, they're free to make it happen—no questions asked. Employees feel respected, trusted, and valued through this empowerment—and customers are

23. Customer inquiries and issues customer with the help that person needs, there should has a problem with a member of the customer service team, they should know how to and be able to easily file a complaint and resolve the issue with a supervisor.

Anticipate needs.

From your customers to your staff members, being tuned in to your people enough to anticipate what they might need before they even have the chance to speak it is absolutely critical to building a culture and a

26. Team members follow up with

The work doesn't end when the customer hangs up the phone or closes the chat window. Your business can and should keep the conversation going by following up (in a useful and welcome way, of course): send an including a summary of what was discussed along with any applicable informational resources or perhaps a perspectives, and talents. These are the elements that bind together any strong community, but they don't arise out of nowhere. As a business leader, you need to build and nurture culture. How? At Ruby, we do it by encouraging employees to work together, help one another, share in each other's successes, and contribute to something bigger than themselves.

31. You regularly collect feedback from customers—outside of transactional conversations.

Be sure to ask your customers what you can do to improve their experiences. This means more than simply soliciting product reviews or business ratings.

What areas of customer service bonus discount code—anything that shows you're thinking about the customer and care.

culture.

email thanking the customer for calling, perhaps customers after conversations.

company worthy of loyalty.

are escalated when necessary.

When the customer service team can't provide a be a process in place to connect the customer to someone who can serve them. And when a customer delighted by their thoughtful gestures.

18. Team members are aware of and comply with all relevant rules and regulations. Your customer service team members need to be trained in any laws and regulations, such as the Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act (HIPAA), that might apply to your business. This isn't just about following the rules and avoiding fines and jail time; it's also about treating customers ethically and with respect. Keep in mind that your customer service staff represent your business—their words and actions are your words and actions, and without proper training, they can get you into trouble.

Personalize your interactions, go the extra mile, and make sure your customers are having an experience with your business, not just an interaction.

questions.

the best person to help you."

don't know" is actually the worst:

19. Team members clearly communicate brand values. Representing a business means communicating in a way that aligns with everything that business stands for. Your customer service team needs to live and breathe your company's mission, purpose, and values. From the moment they get in contact with a business representative, your customers should have a sense of what's special about your company. Create experiences. Be the kind of company that keeps people (literally) calling back for more.

> 21. Team members are able to effectively handle difficult

No one wants to hear "I don't know." Great customer service professionals know that it's not about having the answer to every question, but about knowing what to say when you don't know. Instead of saying "I don't "Let me find out for you," or "Let me connect you with know," they should emphasize what they can do. Think:

Here is a quick video about why the phrase "I

24. Team members anticipate

Excellent customer service professionals seem like psychics—they know what a customer wants and needs before the person even thinks to ask. This isn't as difficult as it may sound. It often takes the form of reading cues and taking small actions. Examples a meeting due to a personal loss an alternative solution

Keeping dog treats handy today, we've got you covered.

Guide.

Sending a care package to a client who missed

Not scheduling an appointment for a patient's

Interpreting a hesitant "sure" as a signal to offer

Discover how to WOW customers by delivering the customers' needs.

include...

birthday

unexpected.

Make meaningful connections. The apex of customer service, take the connections we mentioned above, and bring them to another level: make them meaningful. Make them actionable. Go above and beyond to ensure that your connections with your customers create a ripple effect with real travel power.

frustrated and feel mistreated when they need to 28. You have developed a positive, inclusive organizational team can keep track of who's getting in touch, when, and why. There are plenty of customer relationship Culture and employee engagement are closely linked management (CRM) applications out there—check out and both drive business success. According to Daniel your options and implement a system at your Coyle, author of The Culture Code: The Secrets of organization if you haven't already. Highly Successful Groups, healthy organizational cultures tend to exist where people feel safe, are willing to be vulnerable, and share a purpose. Organizational culture also needs to be diverse and inclusive; when you leave people out, you leave out their ideas, do you have under control? What needs improvement?

32. You incorporate feedback into your customer service approach

Don't just listen to what your customers tell you; implement it in your business. Show that you care about your customers by tailoring your products and and business model.

 Stay connected anywhere, anytime. O Team members clearly communicate brand values.

Get to know your customers and what you could do to services to their needs-starting with your customer serve them better. What aspects of your business do service approach. After all, if your customer service they care about the most? What frustrates them? What doesn't serve customers, what's the point? would they improve? And that's our customer service

O Customer service is available through live chat.

O Customer service wait times are minimal.

Calls are screened and transferred efficiently.

Ruby today!

Team members are greeting people in a professional, friendly

How did you do?

 A robust, flexible customer service infrastructure is in place. All customer service team members are fully trained. Customer service training is ongoing. Customer service is available by phone. O Your phone number is easy to find.

25. Team members foster connections with customers. This is the big one. Connection is at the core of good customer service. It's the secret ingredient among brands that establish passionate followings and robust books of business without ever spending a dollar on advertising. All of these tips can ultimately help you foster connections with customers, but if you're looking for quick, actionable tips you can put into practice

For a more thorough exploration of this of Business Connections: A Business

29. You've specified and are monitoring customer service KPIs.

them, you'll have a hard time reaching them. And if you haven't connected your customer service efforts to your larger business objectives, you have no way to improve your approach, let alone ensure customers are being measure key performance indicators (KPIs). Common customer service metrics include customer satisfaction

(CSAT) score, net promoter score (NPS), customer effort score (CES), churn rate, retention rate, response time, treated right. You need to specify, monitor, and

If you don't know what your goals are or how to track topic, download our free ebook, The ROI and resolution time. 30. You keep track of all conversations with customers and Customer service team members should not be starting completely fresh when speaking with someone who's previously contacted your business. People tend to get repeat information or reintroduce themselves. Be sure to maintain a database of customers and leads so your audit checklist! Wherever your business stands today, you don't have to manage the complexities of customer service by yourself. Ruby's team of virtual receptionists can help • Deliver personalized experiences, Build customer loyalty, and

Your Customer Service Audit Checklist

O Customer service is available through email. O Team members foster connections with customers. Customer service is available via social media. O Team members follow up with customers after conversations. You've created a comfortable, welcoming environment physically, virtually, or both. Team members are engaged and happy at work. O You have support for off-hours and after-hours service. O You have developed a positive, inclusive organizational culture.

27. Team members are engaged and happy at work. Your customer service representatives can't make customers happy if they aren't happy themselves. Study leads. after study demonstrates the link between employee engagement and customer satisfaction. Learn how to improve your bottom line by fostering happiness.

> you... Grow your business,

> > O Team members personalize customer service interactions. O Team members are able to effectively handle difficult questions. Team members are empowered to solve customers' problems and go the extra mile. O Customer inquiries and issues are escalated when necessary. Team members anticipate customers' needs.

O You offer customer service in more than one language. Team members practice active listening Team members demonstrate knowledge of your products and/or Team members keep conversations positive, personal, and quick. Team members are aware of and comply with all relevant rules and regulations.

We're here to serve you by serving your customers.

www - ruby - com

LAPA

866-611-7829

You've specified and are monitoring customer service KPIs. O You keep track of all conversations with customers and leads. You regularly collect feedback from customers—outside of transactional conversations. O You incorporate feedback into your customer service approach and business mod

Have more tips or experiences with customer service that you would like to share? Email us at rubyreads@ruby.com! Get started with