Introduction to credit control and accounts receivable automation

It's no great insight that many businesses are having a tough time right now. What may be surprising is the impact on accounts receivable that has resulted due to COVID-19. An estimated 209% rise in overdue invoices has been calculated since the start of the pandemic. Even in good times it's important to maintain consistent cash flow and avoid wasting valuable time chasing payments, especially for smaller businesses. What we learned after the 2008 crash is that when a recession comes around, getting paid on time is more crucial than ever.

Anticipated cash flow is what allows any business to function in a competitive market. Many believe that expansion is the biggest risk for a business, but in fact, it's a lack of working capital that sinks many companies - and that can be due to ineffective accounts receivable (A/R) processes. Effective A/R and credit control allows you to get paid faster, which in turn means that you can pay your own suppliers faster. This results in avoiding late payment fees, improving your own credit rating and gaining more opportunities to invest in the growth of your business.

Automating your accounts receivable (or credit control - as it's often referred to) involves getting customers to pay for your goods or services in a timely fashion. It sounds so simple. In a perfect world everyone would pay exactly when they're supposed to. You'd never have to spend a minute chasing or managing relationships with customers' accounts departments. But if 2020 has taught us anything it's that we don't live in a perfect world. In reality, our customers often have the same cash flow problems as us. It's often a juggle between ensuring smooth relationships and putting pressure on to be paid what you're owed when it's due.

Automating your accounts receivable process takes away the pain in getting paid one time; letting you save time on manual tasks and reduce days sales outstanding, whilst maintaining great customer relationships.

Personalisation with a human touch

Your time is too valuable to write every invoice reminder.

Encourage on-time payments by personalising the look and text of all your invoice reminder messages. Use fully-customisable templates that automatically pull in your desired customer information, such as their name, amount owed and due date. Add or edit a branding theme, or simply upload your logo and you're ready to go.

Automate personalised invoice reminders

Customise templates to your personal style and tone of voice so your customers won't know you're using an automated system.

Include multiple attachments

Speed up payment of invoices by automatically attaching their invoices and customer statements.

Maintain the human touch

All invoice reminder messages are sent from your usual email address and can match your usual signature, including your logo.

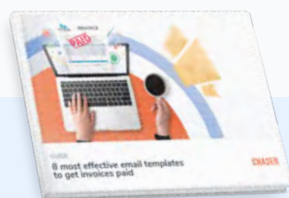

Thank your customers for paying

Build on your great customer relationships by sending automatic 'thank you for paying' emails after receipt of payment.

Group multiple invoices in one reminder

Don't bombard your customers with multiple reminders. Automatically group multiple invoices into a single reminder.

Get the timing right

Chase payments for overdue invoices at a time that suits you and your customers.

Chasing payments for overdue invoices can drain your energy and means time away from running your business. Never forget to follow up on an unpaid invoice again. Set up as many reminders as you need in a sophisticated schedule.

Create multiple customisable schedules

Choose the frequency and intervals of your invoice chasing. Multiple schedules can be created and tailored to different customer groups, such as good or bad payers, those on payment plans, or long-term clients.

Choose the best day and time

Encourage positive customer paying habits by sending invoice reminders on the same day and at the same time each week. Automatically avoiding sending reminders outside working hours, on weekends or bank holidays.

Keep track

See all your chasing activity in a centralized CRM, accessible from anywhere.

Trying to keep track of all follow-ups for every customer and invoice can be time-consuming and confusing. You can end up chasing the same invoice twice, or worse, never chasing the invoice at all. Seeing all your chasing activity in one place is essential to getting it right.

Use interactive reports to track your debtors

Easily understand your customers' payment behaviours and gain real-time insights into your aged receivables.

Ensure the right contact gets your reminders

Get alerted by forewarning emails summarising which contacts will be included in your next automated reminders, so you can edit if necessary.

Track notes and conversations

See at a glance all emails sent and replies received for each invoice and customer. This saves time spent searching through inboxes, and gives others in the business full visibility to stay up to date on communications. Add any notes from phone calls to keep your colleagues in the loop, set reminders and assign follow up tasks to your teammates.

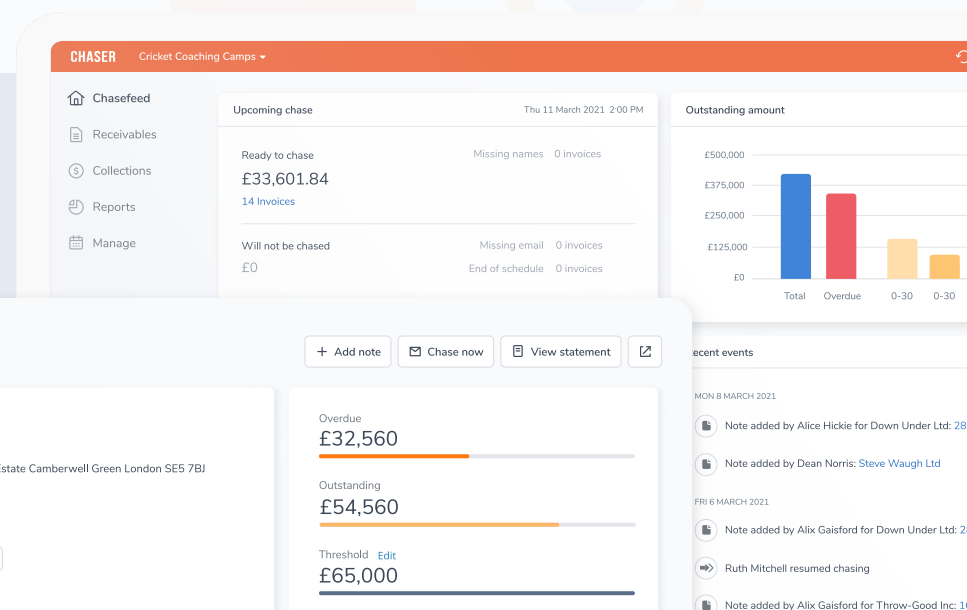

Don't chase a paid invoice by mistake

Chaser is automatically synchronised with your QuickBooks Online account every hour, before any reminder is sent and on-demand to reconcile all payment transactions and ensure chasing reminders are stopped after a payment has been made.

Encourage debtors to pay

Make it easier for customers to pay you, through your dedicated customer portal

You and your customers can use your dedicated customer portal to see all relevant information about outstanding debts, make payments and explore alternative payment options. This helps encourage faster payment of invoices and provides more visibility over your customer accounts.

Never chase a paid invoice

Your customer portal automatically reconciles invoices with your integrated QuickBooks Online account, so you never accidentally chase a paid invoice.

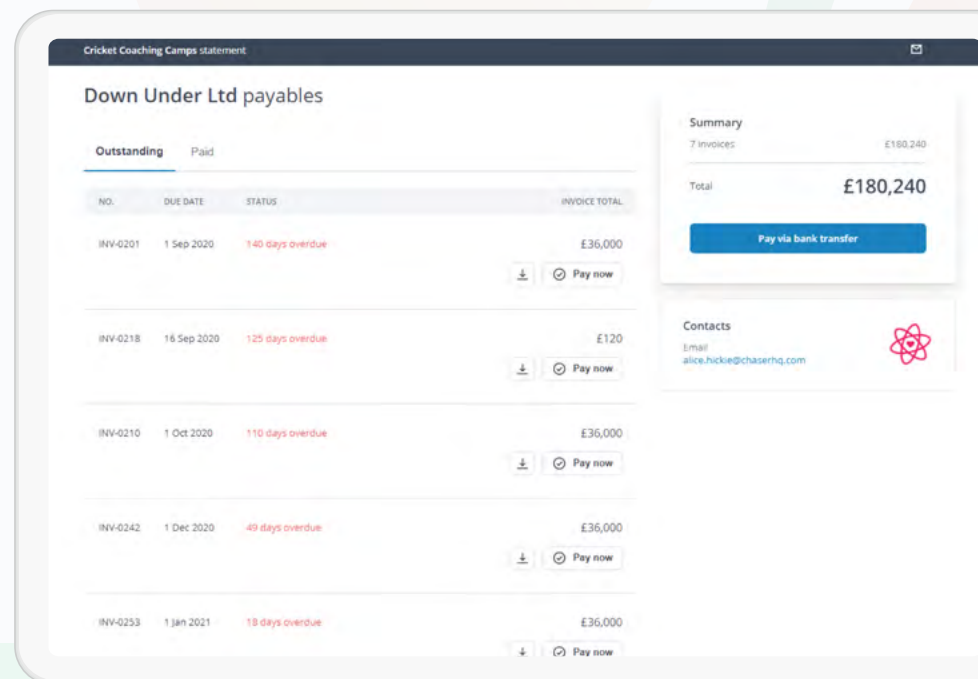

Increase your chances of getting paid

By offering overdue customers different payment options, you make it easier, and faster, for them to pay their invoices.

Save time by giving your customers access to all invoice-related information

When using the customer portal, you can provide customers with all relevant information on their invoices (e.g. supporting documentation, invoices, customer statements), giving them visibility on upcoming payments and reducing the number of queries you receive on invoices.

The screenshot displays the Chaser Collections app interface. At the top, there's a summary of collection status:

Ready to collect	Collecting	Collected
£124,195.20	£1,620	£56,880
20 invoices	1 invoice	12 invoices

Below this, a modal window titled "Escalate to collection" for "Throw-Good Inc." is open. It states: "Our considerate collections operate on a no-win, no-fee basis". It shows "Invoices (1)" with a "Total fee £58.50". A table lists the invoice details:

Invoice	Outstanding	Rate	Fee
INV-0260	£450	13% + VAT	£58.50

At the bottom of the modal, there's a "Collect" button. In the background, a list of invoices is visible with columns for "Invoice Fee" and "Items per page".

"Our goal is to collect your payments in the friendliest way!"
